TSHIAMO'S HOPE FOUNDATION

EMOTIONAL WELLNESS CHECK-IN

Because caring for you matters too

Why Checking In Matters

- NICU and preemie parenthood is exhausting, frightening, and isolating — feeling overwhelmed does not mean you are failing
- Checking in with yourself regularly is an act of self-care, not selfishness
- Naming a hard feeling on paper often makes it easier to carry
- This is a reflection tool, not a diagnosis — please see the note on the next page about reaching out for extra support

Name: _____ Date: _____

HOW AM I DOING TODAY?

Mood	1 — 2 — 3 — 4 — 5	(1 = struggling today · 5 = feeling strong)
Energy	1 — 2 — 3 — 4 — 5	(1 = struggling today · 5 = feeling strong)
Sleep quality last night	1 — 2 — 3 — 4 — 5	(1 = struggling today · 5 = feeling strong)
Appetite	1 — 2 — 3 — 4 — 5	(1 = struggling today · 5 = feeling strong)

REFLECTION

What's weighing on my heart today?

One small thing that helped today, even a little:

Something I'm grateful for right now:

Who did I lean on today? (partner, friend, family, nurse, counsellor, no one — and that's okay too)

ONE SMALL STEP FOR TOMORROW

Something small I can do for myself tomorrow:

When to Reach Out for Extra Support

It may help to talk to your doctor, a counsellor, or someone you trust if you notice: persistent sadness or numbness for more than two weeks, trouble bonding with your baby, constant worry or panic, difficulty sleeping even when you have the chance to rest, or thoughts of hurting yourself.

SADAG Mental Health Line: 0800 21 22 23 (8am–8pm) or 0800 456 789 (24 hours)

Suicide Crisis Line: 0800 567 567

You are not alone in this, and asking for help is a sign of strength, not weakness.

You are doing an incredibly hard thing with so much love. Be gentle with yourself. With love and hope, Tshiamo's Hope Foundation